POETRY

THE REGULAR.

He's the stalwart, he's the stendy, he's the true, He's the fellow when there's any work He's the fellow when there's any work to do;
He's the spirit of adventure in the discipline that counts,
And across the country's peril, when the order comes—ne mounts.
The infantry, the cavalry,
It's what you will, he's there,
With that stolid visage glowing,
And that let-me-at-em air.

Oh, he's winging o'er the mesas, and he's flying to the tune Of the bugies of the morning in that land of burning noon;
To the trumpets and the colors or the silent hike, the same,
He's the soldier of his country, and he's dandy, and he's game.
A hop across the border,
With his sidearms lingling sweet—Good-night to every forman
That he's started out to mest.

He's the restless and the burning and the leaping spirit, true;
The regular, the regular, when there is work to do.
The heat to him a riffle and the sand and cacti sport.
On his wheeling steed he's ready when the message hits the fort.
The infantry, the cavalry,
It's the regular that counts,
When the bandits hit the border and he marches or he mounts

With us, a little darkness

Then through the cloudy ray The light of a golden promise Painting a newer day. —Haltimore Sun.

GO OUT AND HELP ANOTHER. Go out and help another just as you've Go out and help another just as you've been helped along—
I like to think that's more than all the music of the song.
Than the glory of the conquest or the triumph of the art—
For it seems so like the message of God's spirit in the heart.

Go out and help another—it's the way to win, I think.

When the battle is upon you and you're crowded to the brink—

To turn from all the danger with the faith to know and see

That there's some one going to help you in the hour of misery.

And I've noticed in life's struggle that the sunniest days are those
When we've made some burden lighter with the fragrance of our rose.
When we've half forgotten our troubles in a thoughtful word or deed
To make some heart seem sweeter that had much to make it bleed. Go out and help another-if you've got

Go out and help another—if you've got that 'ar along,
You will find it sweet as music or as blossoms of a sons:
You will climb the rough hill better, and you'll find the path you've trod

Just like summer when the spirit is at peace with man and God.

—Baitimore Sun.

A new record has been established by the United States bureau of fisheries up to March 1, 1316, in its fish-cultural operations of the present fiscal year. During this period the actual distribution of fish of all species in the various fields of activity shows an increase of approximately $800,000,000 over the distributions during the same period in 1915. This would indicate that the output for the entire year will exceed the record output of 4,288,757,804 fish and eggs for the fiscal year 1915, and will probably reach 5,000,000,000 or more.
